Tag Archives: poznań Poznań is my home city. It's the only city that I know without slums, ghettos, or leper colonies. And its fine, modern buildings hint at the status of its citizens. It's hard to describe the feeling I have of being home in Poznań. But the name itself is an indication: Transylvania. Let's take a look at the history of the Poznań and Transylvania! The area where the city of Poznań is now located used to belong to the kings of Poland, but was conquered by the Kingdom of Hungary in the 13th century. Around the year 1400, Poznań was one of the most populous cities of the Kingdom of Hungary. At that time, the area was known as Polanska and the city as Poznań. The present-day city of Poznań was erected in the late 16th century by the King of Poland in order to move the capital of the Kingdom of Poland from Warsaw to the Baltic Sea. It was the largest Polish city for many centuries. King Sigismund III Vasa and Marie de Medicis also planned in the city of Poznań the construction of beautiful palaces and a university. Prussian rule ended in the Revolution of 1830. The city is now a part of the modern state of Poland. The city of Poznań The most notable buildings of the city include the Late Renaissance church of the monastery in the city centre, a medieval castle with a tower, and the remains of a baroque palace of the Medici family, The Warsaw–Poznań Railway Line was built through Poznań and started operating in 1884. Poznań is a major railway transport hub in Poland, with a lot of train services to destinations throughout the country. But the city is not only beautiful. There are so many things to see! The city has an interesting history, holds the second biggest Christmas market in Poland, and is full of things that people love. It's a city that has gone through a lot in it's history, and I am happy to be alive when all this happened. When I go back to Poznań, it makes me feel like I am home!Q
