We already work very hard on it. It would be his honour to get your personal comments. We believe that together we can achieve great things.the religious right has recognized a super power i would guess it is up to them to determine. i really don't think there is any reason why a country, so long as there are religious of reason, should not have a monarch. well, ok, you do have a political monarch (the head of state, or some such) but the guy really isn't a dictator, right? he is there to take care of all of us... if you will notice that the United States elected a president from the same party that is now headed by this country's prime minister, you will be amazed at the similarities. the religious right has always seemed to have followed in the footsteps of the Catholic church. it's time to get royally fucked. you may not agree with the world's number one religion, but America is number one, we can have both, not only once in a lifetime. I know that the Pope has been doing what he could to make the world a better place, much like the Israelites, I'm sure Joseph was one of the best leaders that ever lived. I think that his message still has much power, at least to me. I think this is a time that we need to take a step back and start acting like a more civilized people. If we don't start acting like a normal family and stop with the witch burning and no touch zones, then we will never have a bright and prosperous future. I'm a Catholic myself and I really love the Pope. I would also love to say that I'm not religious, but most days I feel that I have a very strong spiritual connection. Lately, I just wish that the people would shut up about their imaginary god or gods. It's enough that there are many religions and philosophies. No one should be able to tell people what to believe. I know this thread is more than 2 years old, but I'm just so sick of all the religious nuts and my opinion is a bit different but i'll say this. When someone says some thing about your religion or God you don't need to lash out as if they had just said something about your God.
