i'm not saying it's a FFXIII clone or anything but this IS a pretty fun game. I got the "Final Fantasy Type-0" on launch day from my then-boyfriend, with the bundled "Platina PSP Case and Pearl Handbag" and had this game right away.

i probably should also mention this is the "Final Fantasy Type-0" which has a PS2 remake by Square Enix and it's actually pretty interesting.

The intro track is called "Aerial," and it sounds like a little bit of Drive-By Truckers in the '90s — it has the minimalist drums and kick-snare, and what sounds like real horns or something, and the vocals are from the Spanish folk group Los Super Seven. It's the perfect start to a series of portraits of the voices behind scenes of the music industry. And if this first chapter comes off as a little jaded, or a little too polite, that's OK, that's part of the job. I've been working with an amazing, highly talented team for the past decade and a half, and recording them feels like when I got into music, when I started playing out all the time and being around the scene. That feeling of, what are you all playing? What are you all going through? People who come into the world in advertising are thinking, How does the world work? How does it all work? That's the same feeling that comes with being in a bedroom recording. Suffice it to say that this series of portraits isn't going to be kind to anyone in the music industry, unless they either came from a humble, little guy background (all of these guys who are featured came from some kind of rural upbringing or their parents had a musical business, or they played in their school band). It's just that unlike most other industries, most people in music are deeply dissatisfied. Either from the struggle, or the fact that if they don't get over that hump, which is making money off of music, they're gonna be starving artists, and they're gonna be out on the street doing bum gigs for $20 to play in the cold to pay the rent. On the other hand, if you come out of a more well-heeled household and if you get into the business, you come into it with an attitude like, "Well, I came up through the music business. I was a drummer. So I know how to do this." Well, that's not true. I've spoken to a number of people who
