In that case is there any way to check if this application is already installed in the phone? (I don't know if my phone is rooted or not) A: You can use packageManager.queryIntentActivities() to get an array of package names that are installed in the device. You need to query for all installed packages to check if they provide the activity you want (or service you want to check). If you need only for Android 2.3+, you can use the PackageManager.getInstalledPackages() to get an array of package names for all installed packages that do not require root access. From your list of installed packages, you can filter out
