the. Serious Sam 4: Planet Badass Offline. Common Topics; License: GNU General Public License;. Version: 3.0;.Q: How do I set environment variables using psql? pg_dump and psql are both unable to import the data from my PostgreSQL database, because I have a list of environment variables set that only I use (e.g. AWS_ACCESS_KEY and AWS_SECRET_KEY) and it seems these are not set. psql does not recognize these variables if I do something like this: psql -hdb1.clcass01.dev -p5432 -t -c "SET AWS_ACCESS_KEY = 1234; SET AWS_SECRET_KEY = xyz" pg_dump works fine, which is even better, since I'm not sure whether they would be relevant. I think the issue might be something to do with the -t flag in psql, which might be confusing it, since it's being used as a boolean flag to display the content of a database, rather than an environment flag. This command would work if I were using pgadmin3, but for some reason it's not working with psql. How can I set some environment variables that psql can recognize? A: Pgadmin can only set environment variables for you if you have the Advanced Server Settings entry set to "Recreate database's home directory" or "Create data directory when needed." That is, once you start the server, you have the option to start the application with one or the other of those settings. I don't think there is a way to do it directly with psql. (I imagine there is, but I don't know it.) Turbochargers for supplying air to the intake of an internal combustion engine are well known. Such turbochargers comprise a turbine connected to a compressor, and a rotating shaft connecting the turbine and compressor. A set of vanes is located on the turbine side of the turbocharger and can be adjusted to direct fluid flow through the turbocharger in a preferred direction. Such vanes are normally act
