By using this great subtitle editing software, you can watch your favorite movies or videos in any language and speed up your understanding. Make Short URLs for Web Pages As HTML5 continues to become the prevalent web markup language, it is important to note that URLs on the web will eventually be limited to just a few characters. This is as a result of the new URL system, which is primarily made up of a site name and (optionally) a query string, commonly referred to as search parameters. The new URL system is called short URL or hash URL and you are probably familiar with services such as bitly, which provides an easy-to-use service for making them. Unfortunately, though, making a short URL for a web page using the new URL system is far from trivial. There are a number of ways that you can make a short URL for web pages, but you are only likely to need a couple of them: The web page you want to make a short URL for should have a preferred URL using the new URL system, otherwise you will not be able to make it a short URL. For the purposes of this article, assume that it has a preferred URL that is the same as the document's absolute URL. For example, let us say that you have a web page at `http://www.example.com/abc/xyz.html` and you want to make a short URL for it using the new URL system. The HTML markup for the page itself should look like this: `<meta name="preferred-url" content="http://www.example.com/abc/xyz.html">` Then you make the short URL for it by using the following bitly syntax: `bitly.com/a/b/{document_name}` The bitly URL shortening service will parse out the bits of the new URL string and replace them with a unique short URL that is the desired length. Shortening the URL in this way allows you to better publish the URL on other social platforms. Bitly is one of the more popular URL shortening services, but there are others out there that can help. URL Shortening in Other Applications URL shortening is not just a fancy new web technology, and it can be used in other applications. For example, to make a shortened URL in Photoshop, you need to modify the Default URL field in the Web page, which is located in the Options bar of the designer. For example, if the page URL is `http://www.example.com/abc/xyz.html` then it should be set to `3a67dffeec`
