Check out the gameplay preview here! The official GACHI ADVENTURE: Billy's Legacy page with all the Game news, media and trailers can be found here!Q: Can I feed a two-horse brushless speed controller with a 5V supply? I'm building a flying zivio quad using a proto board with a 3-cell 20C lipo battery. I've connected one channel of it directly to the ESC (with no resistor to reduce it below 3.3V), and want to use the other channel to power a DB25 connector cable for an omnidirectional antenna. But then I read that the power supply of the ESC should be 3.3V or lower. So I get worried that I'll blow the motor or ESC because I won't be able to fit the 5V needed to power the connector cable. Could I make it work with a 5V supply? If yes, how? Or should I just hook up the battery directly to the ESC, without having to split the power? (as the battery is depleted, I plan on splitting the battery and sending the 5V channel to the ESC and the 3.3V channel to the radio, but the question is from the perspective of setup, i.e. does a 5V or a 3.3V power supply to the ESC). A: If you can find an ESC that takes 5V, I don't think there will be any issues. A: Yes. Two reasons: you only need a few milliamps of current, and a 5V supply will be enough to do that. there will be no voltage drop on the wire. In fact, if you need 5V and current, you can take two 3.3V wall adapters and step them up with an LM7805 (or something similar). However, if you're worried about the power supply dropping voltage, I would not use that. If the ESC requires at least 3.3V, then you will want to use a regulator and step the battery voltage down to 3.3V before feeding it into the ESC. Q: bless & pathswap & create_function not working I am going through W.R. Skillicorn's Book about c++ function. I have the following code: #include typedef int(*t_func

What's new in Everybody Wham Wham:

Hello, this is Bunny and I have a tragic but awesome pair of news to tell you. That's right, WoC is back in the same channel as Inquestor. The blog and website she's running currently has a new mission and that is "Here for you". It's there to help you with depression. Wow, has depression become more common...?! The new blog's theme is Inspiration is better than being happy. I may have written that, but I needn't have. She is doing good things, has a busy schedule and deserves being put on some more main tags. She even went a good bit further and started three blogs. I haven't read those, so you can have that off your list of blogs to read. Wait, you ain't gone check it out?! Then, you'd know about the new blog and that she is at "Blogging 101". There is now a third blog that will help you with addicted blogs or even gaming bloggers with "Bad blogging habits!" That's a surprise. What else? Now, regularly, updates are being made to her Stat Counter! It's been a bit silent though, and now she is got both Fan Art as well as and finally her own outfit. How perfect is that?! (click the link) I would also like to say that I have been spending a lot of my time with "Ms. Geon" and the rest of the Inquestor crew. Our time is about to become more frequent in each other's lives, but she wants to work things out with her blog first. There isn't going to be any PWP in this chan, but I will see you soon in WoC's chan. Suna is hinting with the new chan and we will get it up and running and both you and her can enjoy it. Princess Phiona The main thing that has been popping up is that evidence has been found that may have caused Phiona to change her gender identity into a lesbian. (Yes I know, it's an oxymoron). Yes, I say a a lesbian. I'm not sure if she means that the evidence proves she is a lesbian or if a "lesbian" is the name of her
