Q: divide a number in 1 digit and another in 2 digits, with a maximum of 3 decimal points I have a number of variable declared as: double DocNo = 0; I have to divide the DocNo with 1 decimal point in the 1st one and 2 decimal point in the second one. The problem I get with my code is that the number less than 1 and will have no decimal point. I mean: '000' divide into 10 / 1 = 0 '000' divide into 10 / 2 = 0 '000' divide into 10 / 3 = 0 and I need to get something like: '000.000' divide into 10 / 1 = 5.000 '000.000' divide into 10 / 2 = 5.000 '000.000' divide into 10 / 3 = 5.000 Any ideas how I do it? Thank you. A: You can try the following. Let the input be: 00.000 23.333 45.000 87.444 First, get the number of digits after the decimal point, let's call it digits. Then use NumberFormat to convert your number to a string, taking into account the number of digits after the decimal point: string docNoString = Convert.ToString(docNo,CultureInfo.InvariantCulture); int digits = docNoString.Split(',').Length -1; And then apply your pre-defined format string, with the number of digits of your input. string result = string.Format("{0:

Variants of 10p15.3 microdeletion syndrome affecting the KAT6A gene: Phenotypic heterogeneity and phenocopy. We report two patients with a 10p15.3 microdeletion between markers D10S1138 and D10S1239. The deletion involved the 5' end of KAT6A. The mother of the patients had a de novo 10p15.3 microdeletion, resulting in a phenotype of 10p terminal deletion syndrome, indicating that paternal deletion of 10p15.3 is also compatible with a phenotype. The proband had face and limb anomalies, facial dysmorphic features, and growth retardation. However, the proband's mother had a normal phenotype and carried a 10p15.3 microdeletion of equal size to the proband. We propose that this case represents a form of phenocopy. The proband's son had similar face and limb anomalies with the characteristic facial gestalt, but appeared to have an unaffected phenotype. The mother's daughter had no major features, and carried a 10p15.3 deletion of approximately 8 Mb, the smallest reported here, which may also represent a form of phenocopy. Our observations point to high phenotypic variability of patients with a microdeletion in 10p15.3. The recently identified ID gene, KAT6A, and its protein product, CREBBP, appear to be involved in normal limb development. Finally, the KAT6A/CREBBP gene is a candidate for genotype-phenotype correlation in patients with 10p15.3 microdeletions.The present invention generally relates to a wireless communication device and, more particularly, to a wireless communication device that allows hands-free operation of a telephone. The invention has particular utility in conjunction with a cordless telephone having a handset cord that projects from the handset. It is presently common for a wireless telephone to provide hands-free audio communication capability. This enables a user to operate a cordless handset without having to hold the handset to his or her ear. This is beneficial, particularly when a user is driving a motor vehicle and is thus required to hold the hands-free handset. Conventional cordless handsets are often bulky, and are typically manufactured in a large variety of sizes and weights. For convenience in carrying the handset, the handset cord projecting from the handset is of a length that allows the handset to be carried in a pocket, for example
