It is known from a partial skeleton, including only the skull, lower jaw, two forelimbs, and some vertebrae. Discovery and species Trochosaurus was discovered by Mongolian paleontologist Nüzhen Sumiya in 1994, but its species name trochosaurini was not published until 2002. Trochosaurus was discovered in a Group I Mongolian dinosaur-bearing formation, dating to the late Cenomanian age of the Late Cretaceous period. The type specimen, BSU J0069/C2, consists of a partial skull, jaw, and partial forelimb. Trochosaurus differs from previous troodontids by including two large fossae on the inner side of the skull. These fossae provide additional area for the attachment of deep muscles, likely providing the large jaw muscles with a larger attachment point. Description Trochosaurus was a very large troodontid, and is estimated to have been long and weighed between. It is classified as having a bipedal posture, with walking being the primary means of locomotion. Trochosaurus had a semi-circular crest on its skull, a feature it shares with Troodon, Aegyptosaurus, and Tylocephale. However, this crest appears to have been modified to be more fan-like and not around the entire animal. Trochosaurus had a very long rostral, longer than its skull in

The Pet of the Week Meet Sally, an adorable golden retriever mix who was discovered, rescued and bonded with by her owner. This sweet young lady is described by her owner as a perfect lap dog. She is playful, friendly, and eager to please. Though she is a little shy around strangers and other dogs, she is very outgoing with her human family. She happily accepts belly rubs and cuddling, even on chilly mornings. Sally has no allergies, and is a good candidate for adoption at this time. Please visit One Wish Animal Rescue at 222 W. Layton Ave. in South Lyon, to meet this adorable soul, and make her part of your family. a different answer to the same question. I do not understand your comment that by "forcing" the user to use the UIDevice instance you have to spend time. You can create the object for every iteration of the loop. You can check the type of the i and also restrict yourself to values of type Int by using the "convenient"!, which returns the corresponding value as type bool indicating if it was actually false or true, like this: let s = UserDefaults.standard let i: Int i = Int.random()! print(i) if (i!= 0) { let device = UIDevice.current if device.type!=.iPhone { i = Int.random()! print(i) s.set(i, forKey: "i") print(i) d0c515b9f4
