Nir Chaim Nachum, that is, leading from the rear, is the somewhat simplistic, Conservative, gender-unaware, religiously uninformed way in which contemporary religious Jewry is run. With hardline doctrines and practices that span the spectrum of Orthodoxy to Reform and also an outlook that amounts to dangerous agnosticism about the existence of God, it tends to be more of a hindrance than a help to the Jewish people, and has been criticised as divisive and potentially dangerous. The Religious Life Association is the national representative body of British Orthodox congregations in the UK, which is a bit like being the football association for a football club – a very quixotic description of a tiny organisation that seems to exist for no reason, but is very helpful to other Jewish bodies, who may need to set up new communities, and is also useful because its member synagogues are useful to the Conservative movement in general, which for all its faults is the largest part of the UK Jewish community. In a similar way, several Jewish communities are members of the
