There is increasing economic pressure to reduce the energy consumption of a facility's lighting system. The lighting system of a facility is typically a lighting control system (LCS) for controlling lighting, including the dimming of the lights, in various areas of the facility (e.g., maintenance areas, walkways, corridors, parking lots, etc.). For example, the LCS can be implemented in various locations, such as in the facility's control room, automated lighting controllers, servers, central processor units (CPUs), or the like. The LCS can be implemented as a centralized lighting control system, where all of the lighting controls are centralized in one location. Alternatively, the control system can be distributed in several areas in the facility where lighting control functionality is locally implemented. Many facilities use one or more end b7e8fdf5c8
