Q: How to track the change of HTTP header in AJAX request without using access to web page In the following way, I want to monitor the status of HTTP header changes, for example: `$(document).ready(function() { console.log($('').text('Status:'+ window.XMLHttpRequest.getAllResponseHeaders())); });` According to the output result: `[object Object],[object Object],[object Object]...` So it's only the last value is tracked. A: You could run the code snippet when the page loaded, and check the results in `document.ready`.

`$(document).ready(function() { console.log($('').text('Status:'+ window.XMLHttpRequest.getAllResponseHeaders())); console.log($('').text('Status:'+ window.XMLHttpRequest.getResponseHeader('Accept'))); });` Similarly, once a page is loaded, you can manipulate the HTTP headers by modifying request header. Note that for this case, you have to send HTTP headers before sending a request and it also depends on user-agent. You can add the `setRequestHeader` method to simulate user-agent modification.

`$(document).ready(function() { var xhr = new XMLHttpRequest(); xhr.open('GET', '/test.html'); xhr.setRequestHeader('Accept', 'text/html'); xhr.send(); console.log($('').text('Status:'+ xhr.getResponseHeader('Accept'))); });`
