Let's say I have a script that has temporary files that it writes to a certain directory. Now I'm thinking about how to get rid of that temporary folder and use the data. The data that's written will not be used multiple times, but rather used only in the script. I'm aware of the existence of tempfile module. However, would it be possible to copy that temporary folder to another location? I'm asking this because I want to change the location of the temporary files without corrupting the integrity of the code. A: On a Linux system you can use the r 6d1f23a050
