The Al Mezan Centre for Human Rights said its figure was based on a preliminary survey of 128 detainees taken in 11 prisons in the occupied West Bank. It said Israel was "pushing Palestinians to the brink of despair" in an attempt to make them cave in to its demands or turn to violence. "Detention is the highest form of revenge and provides a better return than death," added the group's Middle East director, Asma Jahangir. Al Mezan had previously documented that the Israelis were holding 1,500 political prisoners but said the new figure was 10 times higher. It said the numbers of people detained included suspected collaborators, detainees who were "unlawfully" transferred from another prison and those accused of extra-judicial killing or torture. Detention "It's a very simple thing: it's detention. If you have a person inside your prison and you can't get him out, or release him, then it's detention," David Keyes, a former Israeli guard, said of the practice of holding Palestinians. Israel disputed Al Mezan's figures as "completely inaccurate", saying that the Palestinians were free to leave "all the time". "We have no intention of holding people who wish to leave," a spokeswoman told the Associated Press news agency. Journalist Eyal Sneh, who went into prison in Bethlehem after visiting the city of Al-Bireh, earlier told Al Jazeera that he believed Israel was holding more than 1,300 of the estimated 2,500 Palestinian prisoners. "The situation in the prisons is very different than what it has been for some years now," he said. "They look like cages. Prisoners are not allowed to
