Refer to the Digital Camera Handbook by Lyons and Lyons for extensive information on camera bodies. Various manufacturers make different lenses and accessories. There is no single best type of lens or all-purpose lens. What matters most is the specific focal length needed for a given task. A wide-angle lens can be used for landscapes or indoor and distance photography, and a telephoto lens is useful for close-up work. Because the sensor is mounted at the bottom of the lens, the shorter focal length delivers a wide-angle view of the scene. The magnification produced by the lens is what produces that effect. A short focal length allows you to magnify the image. Lenses with greater focal length, such as 50 mm or 85 mm, produce a perspective shift. This is done using the angle of view, which can be calculated by multiplying the focal length by the desired horizontal and vertical angle of view. A good rule of thumb is to use a 35 mm lens for a ratio of horizontal view 80 and vertical view 70. For images that need to be printed, such as portraits or landscapes, you can add 0.7x to each ratio, so for a horizontal angle of view of 80 and a vertical of 70, you would use a 70-0.7x80, or 85 mm lens. Cameras with larger sensors will capture images with greater detail. The smaller the sensor size, the less information that is stored by the camera, which makes images underexposed. The ratio is not linear, and the megapixels of a camera represent the total amount of information the sensor can hold. The PENTAX Optio PZ30 is an entry-level digital camera. The PZ30 is the successor to the Optio Z20. The camera uses the same 34x optical zoom lens as previous Z models, providing a focal range of 24-200 mm. The camera has an optical viewfinder that can be removed to make room for the built-in flash. You can either connect a tripod to the camera for extended photography sessions or use it with your hand to snap self-portraits. The camera features an 18 megapixel APS-C sized sensor, an ISO range of 100-1600, a 3x optical zoom lens with optical image stabilization, a maximum shutter speed of 1/4000 sec, and an aperture range of f/2.0-5.0. The camera is available in black, pink, and gunmetal gray. The
